With the economy in a slower recovery that many would hope thousands of people turn to the government for solutions. The argument behind government’s involvement in the economy has been heated for a long time. The purpose of this paper is to show that the government in the long run only hinders the economy with its stimulus. It will discuss the short run and long run implications of government spending during a recession and recovery period. Finally it will show why the key elements and principles allow a health self-managing market.
